ABSTRACT

For information storage and retrieval, a thesaurus is used during indexing and searching processes to translate from natural language into a more restricted retrieval system language. The purpose of this thesaurus is to control the language used to index and retrieve documents of interest to Social and Rehabilitation Service (SRS) and the personnel it serves. At present the indexing so controlled is the SRS "Research Information System Index." Searchers using that document need to be guided by the thesaurus. SRS hopes, however, that the effort expended to study the SRS language and to set it forth, showing interrelationships among terms, will be of use also to those interested in such things as social science language "per se," the scope of activities of SRS, and the categories of clients served. There are three sections to this thesaurus, presenting three arrangements of its terminology. The first is an alphabetic list of terms, both those accepted as system terms and those that refer the user to system terms. The second is a hierarchic arrangement of system terms only. The third is an alphabetic word index to every word used in a multiword term. (The SRS "Research Information System" instruction manual is available as LI 004304.) (Author/NH)

INTRODUCTION

The Purpose of a Thesaurus

For information storage and retrieval, a thesaurus is used during indexing and searching processes to translate from natural language into a more restricted retrieval system language. The system language is restricted to reduce the number of nuances of expression which might be used to describe the same concept, thus increasing the probability of matching the indexers' language with the searchers' language. By this method, the effectiveness and efficiency of the information retrieval system is increased. A thesaurus is a dynamic structure which must change as the language of its domain changes, if it is to serve its purpose well.

The Purpose of This Thesaurus

The SRS Research Information System Thesaurus was empirically derived from the language of reports of research supported by the Social and Rehabilitation Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The subject domain common to SRS researchers came to be described during the course of the thesaurus-building project as "the individualized effects of societal dysfunctions and the attempts made to understand and correct them." To clarify the meaning of societal dysfunctions, they must be seen in perspective with normal societal functions; therefore, the domain of this thesaurus is the total social system, but with emphasis on social dysfunctions.

The purpose of this thesaurus is to control the language used to index and retrieve documents of interest to SRS and the personnel it serves. At present the indexing so controlled is the SRS Research Information System Index. Searchers using that document need to be guided by the thesaurus. SRS hopes, however, that the effort expended to study the SRS language and to set it forth, showing interrelationships among terms, will be of use also to those interested in such things as social science language per se, the scope of activities of SRS, and the categories of clients served.

How This Thesaurus Is Organized

There are three sections to this thesaurus, presenting three arrangements of its terminology. The first is an alphabetic list of terms, both those accepted as system terms and those that refer the user to system terms. The second is a hierarchic arrangement of system terms only. The third is an alphabetic word index to every word used in a multiword term. Section 3 supplements the alphabetic arrangement (Section 1) by providing access to words that may not occur first in the string of words that make up a term.

Terms which refer the user to another term are easily recognized; they take the form given in the following example:

ANKLE Use LEG

System terms (see example below) may be accompanied by any or all of four kinds of note. The first, Refer from, names terms which have not been accepted as system terms but which refer thesaurus users to the term being consulted. The note, Narrower Term, is used to name all terms hierarchically connected to the consulted term, one level below it. Broader Term names the term hierarchically one level higher than the consulted term; if no broader term is specified, the consulted term forms the beginning of a hierarchic chain, and therefore no broader term exists for it. The fourth note, Related Term, names other terms which might be used as additional or substitute index and search terms. The following is an example:

LEG
Refer from: Ankle, Lower Extremity
Narrower Term: Foot
Broader Term: Limbs
Related Term: Artificial Limbs

Use of the Three Thesaurus Arrangements

Selection of the appropriate section depends on need.

The most frequently used arrangement will probably be the alphabetic list (Section 1) because its main function is to inform the thesaurus user of whether or not a given term is accepted as a system term; if it can be located through alphabetic lookup but is not a system term, the user is referred to the term to be used. When a system term is located, various relationships made explicit through notes accompanying it help the user decide whether to use the consulted term or alternatively one of the terms suggested by the notes.

The hierarchic arrangement (Section 2) provides a "logical" approach to relationships among terms. Consultation of the hierarchic arrangement reveals the framework according to which the system language is structured; thus, as was mentioned earlier, overview of all first-level terms demonstrates that man's social system is taken as the underlying classificatory concept, and that the hierarchy is divided into the classic system subdivisions of (1) input, (2) processing (3) output, and (4) feedback and control. Given the rationale on which the system is built, one can soon realize why a particular term is missing or recognize the intended meaning of a listed term.

The function of the word index to multiword terms (Section 3) is to make explicit all contexts in which either system terms or Use terms occur; for example, all uses of the word "rehabilitation," to form terms such as "rehabilitation agencies," "vocational rehabilitation," and "cosmetic rehabilitation."

Some Facts About the Construction of This Thesaurus

Insofar as possible, term selection and note formation for this thesaurus follow the proposed "Guidelines for Thesaurus Structure, Construction and Use" of the American National Standards Institute.

Term selection was made from an alphabetic computer-prepared list of words used in (1) raw indexing terms, (2) report titles, and (3) research project descriptions. The raw materials are to be used in computer-aided indexing of approximately 2,235 report descriptions for the cumulative index SRS Research. Each word on the computer-produced list was accompanied by the two words preceding it and the two following it. The five-word strings provided contextual information with which to make numerous decisions regarding word usage and word interrelationships.

After term selection was completed and Use references made, the human compiler constructed the hierarchy for the approximately 850 accepted system terms. Following this, Broader Term and Narrower Term notes were humanly constructed for each system term; Related Term notes were made as they occurred to the compiler, aided by a team of social science professionals who reviewed the preliminary thesaurus draft. These data were keypunched and a series of error detection programs was run by computer to locate orthographic or logical inconsistencies and other types of error. Automatic error detection made error correction relatively simple; punched cards were manually altered or replaced as necessary. A machine version of the thesaurus was constructed which contains instructions such as "attitude Use attitudes" or "rehabilitative Use rehabilitation." Instructions to make such transformations, too trivial to be useful in the human-readable version of the thesaurus, were restricted to machine use only.

Using "clean" data and only data intended for inclusion in the human-readable version of the thesaurus, a computer program created the Refer from notes, using as raw material the Use notes supplied by the compiler. Also, it made reciprocal all Related Term relationships specified; that is, if the compiler noted that "artificial limbs" was a related term to "leg," then the computer made certain that "leg" was noted as a related term to "artificial limbs." The computer constructed the hierarchical arrangement of the thesaurus from the individual term notes. Matching the machine's product against a human-prepared hierarchy served as an easy check on whether all Broader Term and Narrower Term notes were complete and correct. A program also constructed the word index to multiword terms. (See section 3.)

The total number of system terms in this thesaurus is 844; the number of Use terms in the computer-readable version is 2,964, of which 1,147 are printed in this thesaurus. To facilitate computer processing, the hierarchy was arbitrarily limited to four levels. With few exceptions, which the thesaurus user may come to note, they accommodated the system terminology appropriately.

In accordance with UNESCO recommendations, a copy of this thesaurus has been placed on deposit at the Bibliographic Systems Center, School of Library Science, Case Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio 44106.

Future Plans for This Thesaurus

Computer-aided preparation of SRS indexes, making automated use of this thesaurus, is planned for the future. Methods similar to those described here are expected to be used to update the computer-readable thesaurus each time it is used to process a new body of data. The rate of change of the SRS-related language will determine when a new human-readable edition of the thesaurus is needed. Suggested changes in the thesaurus are welcomed by the SRS office at any time, as are comments from satisfied users.
